Solotaroff's thoughts on diversity: “Not only to obtain variety but also to offset the wholesale spread of tree diseases, it is important that as many good shade-trees as possible should be planted in a city. All the specimens on a street, however, should be of the same kind. When such a plan is followed there is secured increased stateliness, impressiveness, and charm. The beauty and uniformity that are produced by a repetition of the same object are lost when a mixture of species differing in habits of growth and in foliage is introduced, and it is as much at variance with good taste as would be a mixture of orders in the columns of a temple.”

Solotarff's thoughts on tree planting: “It is found that for general plantings, trees from two inches and a half to three inches in diameter give the best results.”

“It is always best to order trees from a nursery as near-by as possible.”

Showing the times: “Of all mechanical injuries to street-trees, however, none are more numerous nor more fatal than the mutilations caused by horses.”

Solotaroff asks “Who shall care for the trees?” “Experience has shown that in order to obtain the greatest degree of excellence in the planting and care of street-trees, the matter must be entrusted to a similar body, and a shade-tree department should be incorporated in every municipality.”
